There has been various lapel pins made of the basic design of the 75 Squadron badge. Some have been very small and others have had incorrect crowns for the monarch of the time. There appears to have never been an Association Lapel Pin for the NZ or the UK associations, so I have therefore created a Lapel Pin that embraces the origins of the Squadron in the RAF times of WW2, and showing the service of 55 years in the RNZAF until disbandment in December 2001.

The original badge of 75(NZ) squadron was developed in 1942. The previous 75(HD) and 75(B) and early 75(NZ) squadrons, never had a squadron badge. When the badge and squadron number was given to New Zealand in 1946, the RAF badge format was not changed to the commonwealth/RNZAF style badge format and therefore became a very unique piece of history with an RAF badge in another Air Force.

To have individual lapel pins of the three different 75 Squadron badges was commercially not possible, so I have therefore combined the badge of the WW2 era with the badge from 1953 to 2001 to form an Association lapel pin that both NZ and UK members can wear with pride.

The RAF Bomber Command Association has produced a lapel pin with a blue background for those that served as part of BC, while a black background denotes an Associate member. I have used the same colour designation on the 75 Sqn Assn pin. Blue paint in the association bar is for those that served on 75, and black for those that are associate Association members.
